

Laurence Anholt

Laurence Anholt has written over seventy books, many in collaboration with his wife, Catherine. They are both highly regarded in the UK and abroad as a successful author/illustrator team, and have had their books translated into many different languages. They met as undergraduates at Falmouth School of Art, and went on to achieve Master's Degrees from the Royal Academy of Art and the Royal College respectively. The books on which they have collaborated are based firmly within their own family's experiences, and many of Catherine's illustrations depict scenes, which families everywhere will recognise. Laurence also writes and illustrates his own books, and has written books with other illustrators, notably the Seriously Silly Stories, a topsy turvy series based on traditional tales but with a wonderful new twist, hilariously illustrated by Arthur Robins. Catherine and Laurence Anholt live in a farmhouse in Uplyme with their three children.
